

Untitled Student Delinquent Game

By Samuel Hannen

Game Identity

- A mix of an RPG and a Yakuza street-brawler combat style that follows a male delinquent in 2000s-era Japan who attends a Japanese High School.
- Open world, narrative-driven, slice-of-life areas that don't require combat; choice between attending school or dealing with troubles outside of school. Missions and quests can possibly time out if not focused on, therefore forcing the player to think about where to spend their time.

Key Pillars

- Brawler
- Slice of life on a timer
- Narrative
- Farcial

Themes and Genre

- Open-world Yakuza-style brawler.
- Cel-shading art style similar to that of Killer 7 or Jet Set Radio

Visual Style

- 3D models with a cel-shading art style similar to Killer 7, adding crease lines to give it a more distinct anime feel.
- I also want the colour palettes of this game to reflect those of the anime JoJo's Bizarre Adventure or the game JoJo's Bizarre Adventure: Eyes of Heaven.
- Clothing worn by students must be student uniforms from 2000s-era Japan.
- Citizens in the open-world town area will dress in clothing from the early 2000s.
- The protagonist will also wear a similar student uniform but will have distinct differences in the way he dresses. For example, an unbuttoned jacket, a vest top underneath the jacket, maybe also wearing a Tokko-fuku jacket when wandering in town.

- Attempt to replicate real Japanese High Schools and their layout.

Visual Style Inspirations

- Ikebukuro West Gate Park - 2000s TV show
- Worst By Chance - 2003 film
- GO - 2001 film
- Blue Spring - 2001 film
- All About Lily Chou-Chou - 2001 film
- Like a Dragon: Infinite Wealth - 2024 video game
- Yakuza: Like a Dragon - 2020 video game
- Killer 7 - 2005 video game
- Jet Set Radio - 2000s video game
- JoJo's Bizarre Adventure: Eyes of Heaven - 2015 video game
- Kenka Bancho: Badass Rumble - 2009 video game
- JoJo's Bizarre Adventure - 2012 anime

Music and Sound

- Unsure of the sound as of now; possibly the style of music from Jet Set Radio. Japanese Rock, UK Garage, House and Old Skool Hip Hop are all possible contenders.
- Simply acoustic guitar would work for areas with a more peaceful atmosphere.

Narrative

- Follows an unnamed (as of now) Japanese delinquent who is first introduced to the player through a brief cutscene of a standoff taking place within the high school. This eventually develops into a tutorial where the player is taught the basics of combat, how to begin stand-offs (explained in the game loop section), how to counter, how to perform takedowns, and perhaps a fear or coolness system that can scare away enemies depending on how cool you look. (The coolness and standoff features are inspired by Kenka Bancho: Badass Rumble)

- After this scene, the delinquent/player would be introduced to the minimap that designates locations for main missions and side quests. The player is told to go to class.
- Depending on the choice of the player, they can skip class or attend, although skipping can get the player into trouble with parents or teachers, which may result in detention (that you can also skip if you can find a way to avoid it/escape).
- Narrative is undecided as of now; however, the school term time features and the player's choice will impact the story and will result in different endings.

Game Loop

- The player can freely explore the town that the protagonist resides in.
- There are many different enemies you can fight in school and in town. Other delinquents will hang around certain areas of the school; Yakuza gangsters and grumpy old people will hang around the town. Will need to expand on more ideas for different enemies. I could maybe look into Rockstar's Bully type of enemies, where other students will fight you depending on your reputation with their clique.
- Like the Yakuza games, there are fun side activities such as karaoke, poker, pool, and Gu-Yi-Oh, an off-brand card game of Yu-Gi-Oh.
- The 'school term time' is a feature that would divide the game into different seasons and terms that dictate whether school is open or not. These different seasons and terms would include certain main and side quests that are exclusive to these time periods.
- Every 6 hours of real-life time in the game would eventually progress to the next term/season.
- The 'cool factor' feature would involve the player having to do certain actions within the school or town to make them seem unbelievably cool. This could involve actions such as: smoking, being posted up against a wall, taking your phone out during class, smoking in class, being extremely nonchalant about fights, styling your character for maximum coolness, walking slowly past classes and people whilst in school or being late for classes but not too late to the point you're given detention. The 'cool factor' feature would be incentivized to the player by needing a certain score or level of this feature for quests, unlocking new clothes, unlocking new fight moves, improving your reputation within the school, and unlocking many more different items that can be used.
- The 'standoff' feature would involve the player walking up to enemies such as other delinquents and performing a minigame that would result in increasing their level of fear and also increase the damage dealt to enemies within the given fight. Putting fear into enemies can sometimes cause them to run away from the fight or be less likely to strike you. This feature is based on Kenka Bancho: Badass Rumble.

Target Market

- This game would be aimed at gamers who enjoy the Yakuza franchise but crave a new artistic style, more control over the narrative, and how the game responds in real time to their playthrough.

- This should be able to attract gamers who enjoy games with time-dependent events. These events would be controlled by the school term timer, which determines a number of possible scenarios in game and what quests are available. This would interact with the main story.

Platform

- This would be released on Steam, with the possibility of being released on consoles if it became popular.
